LOUISVILLE.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1899.

The Snow Storm.

Yesterday morning came upon our city dark and gloomy. The windows gave but little light to houses, and in some instances gas had to be lighted to afford the necessary light for business. It is seldom that so dark and gloomy a day is seen. It was such a day as would make a Frenchman commit suicide, though we heard of no casualties of this kind.

As the noon of the day approached this intense gloom of the atmosphere was explained. The elements above were preparing to spread the earth with a sheet of snow. The snow began to fall, and down it came in earnest. It was such a snow as we might expect to fall in the arctic regions in mid-winter. It came down in such large and frequent flakes that one could not see across the streets. Nor did it melt as it struck the ground, but lay there until it was of considerable depth. It was not all melted away this morning, but the house-tops are yet full and the ground covered wherever it had not been tramped away by the stream of life and vehicles passing through our streets. In out-door appearance, yesterday was a genuine winter day.

One of the most marked effects of the snow storm yesterday was upon the beautiful trees that adorn our city. Our elms, and maples, and sycamores and a dozen other varieties of deciduous shade trees stood yesterday morning with their green foliage upon them. There had been no frost as yet to discolor their leaves, much less to make them fall. They looked as full and fresh in their green ornaments as if spring were just come upon them for a long and flourishing season.

It was this heavy and fresh covering of green foliage that made the snow storm so disastrous to our shade trees. Heretofore when snow has come upon our city, it has been in winter, when all the leaves were gone, and nothing left but the naked branches to catch the falling snow. But yesterday every leaf upon every tree was a receptacle for the falling snow, and it was not long before these millions of leaves became full. They could hold no more, and the great branches of the trees could not hold the leaves thus loaded.

The consequence was that the limbs of our beautiful shade trees gave way with the overwhelming load. Down they came with a crash, and in a short time the streets were covered with the great and small branches that gave way to the superincumbent burden. Some of our most beautiful trees have been seriously injured and deprived of their symmetrical proportions. There is hardly a tree in the city that did not suffer more or less, and some of them came down, body, branches and all, with the great load that overcame their strength.

The tender shrubbery which adorns many of our beautiful yards was of course caught in the storm. We had no warning of winter being so near, and the tender things were not taken in. It was out of all season to see oleanders, pomegranates, oranges, lemons, &c., &c. loaded with snow. Of course these tender plants did not know what to make of it. They felt the cold without a warning note. It is not likely, however, that any of them were killed by the snow, because the atmosphere was nothing like frosty. They were simply chilled; and this morning there seemed a universal rush all over the city to get such things into cellars and green-houses.

Such a snow storm at this season of the year is very rare in this latitude. We remember nothing of the kind in the years we have lived, and we have seen nobody who ever saw anything like it in this region. There must have been some terribly cold elements at work in the atmosphere above us. If it be true that snow is a congelation of the vapor of the atmosphere, which, after being congealed, falls in particles or in aggregated flakes, there must have been considerable cold above us to have produced so much snow.

There is, probably, no doubt that snow is produced by the congelation of the vapor of the atmosphere. Persons who have gone up in balloons have encountered snow at distant heights above the earth, when all was sunshine and summer below. There was cold enough above to freeze the moisture of the air, but the frozen particles were melted before they reached the earth, so that the dwellers upon the land saw not the snow into which the aeronautes were drawn in their flight far above the earth. It was cold up there and warm down here, as occurred in Louisville yesterday.

It is an error to suppose that snow is the result of frozen drops of rain. When rain drops leave the clouds and are frozen before they reach the earth, they fall in the shape of hail. They are ice, and not snow. The vapor of the atmosphere, on the contrary, when frozen, forms snow. The fine, frozen particles aggregate together, not to form solid ice like hail, but the light and porous substance known as snow. Snow is white, because its flakes are made up of innumerable small crystals, whose faces reflect congregated and combined rays of light. Pounded ice will appear white also when its particles are so separated by crushing as to enable the numerous small crystals to reflect accumulated light.

The snow which fell here yesterday was of that kind which forms those destructive avalanches which do so much damage in mountainous regions. It was a damp snow, which formed a little avalanche on every tree-leaf similar to those which gather in overwhelming proportions upon the mountain sides. Dry snow will not thus cling together, but will blow off into changing drifts, which assume another shape at every blast of wind. If the snow which fell here yesterday and crushed our shade-trees with its little avalanches, had come down upon the Alps, it might have formed those tremendous slides which, starting from the mountain tops, carry trees, rocks and everything in their course, until their force is spent in the destruction of the valleys beneath.

THE GOLD RING.

An Exposure.

The New York Times publishes a long account of the combination to advance gold in September.

It says Gould and Fisk manipulated the gold market, and endeavored to get Grant, Boutwell and Butterfield into the speculation, but without success; that the telegraph wires were tapped between New York and Washington; and that the clique were in possession of Boutwell's order to sell gold twenty-five minutes before Butterfield received it. It says Corbin was not in the gold ring, but his business with Jay Gould was in relation to certain railway schemes, for which he was paid by the checks for $100,000 and $25,000, which have been so much talked of. Further revelations are promised in a few days.

As an instance of how it was attempted to entrap some of Grant's household, Jay Gould sent a communication to General Porter, his secretary, with the object of securing his influence by holding out glittering golden baubles. How far that was secured, may be known by the following exchange of correspondence:

New York, September 15, 1899.
Dear General: I have purchased half a million gold on your account.

And the answer:

WASHINGTON, D.C., Sept. 19.
GENTLEMEN: I have not authorized any purchase of gold, and request that none be made on my account. I am unable to enter into any speculation whatever.

Yours, respectfully,
H. PORTER.

In the Times' article the following curious question is asked:

"Do the scandalous operators who forwarded $60,000 worth of gold to Washington, and had them all thrown from the White House at midnight, wish us to publish all of that scandalous proceeding, in answer to allegations that money was sent there?"

It might be well, we think, to publish all that scandalous proceeding. The sooner it is done the better.

The Prescott (Arizona) Miner says: "The sudden death of twelve strapping, murderous Indians, killed in the recent fight, is sufficient cause to stir the blood and gladden the heart of any frontiersman. Then, be it known that, on the 22d day of August last, 'Peace Commissioner' Southerby, who also holds the rank of Captain of the Eighth Cavalry, with twenty-nine fighting friends of Company B, Eighth Cavalry, citizens Willard, Rice and George Monroe, had the very good fortune to get within shooting distance of a band of about thirty Indians, nine of whom were taken suddenly ill, and died on the spot with their moccasins on. The remainder saved themselves by flight."

The newest scandal is a tale of Hermann Grimm's, which represents Goethe as robbing a poor actress who loved him—not, indeed, of money, but of fame. This lady is believed by Herr Grimm to be the author of certain poems which Goethe claimed and published as his own. He bluntly charges the great German poet with the meanest kind of literary larceny, and this upon no evidence whatever, except the bare assertion of the lady in question, who, at the time she made the accusation, was over seventy years of age, and as Herr Grimm acknowledges, in failing memory. She died about ten years ago, and her correspondence with Goethe is not to be published until after ten years more.

LIFE INSURANCE has become very popular in Germany, and the official report for the year ending December 31, 1898, shows that in the North German Confederation there were twenty-three life insurance companies. Three of these had been recently established, but the remaining twenty had insured the lives of 274,973 persons for the aggregate of $212,282,562. The most important of these companies are the Gotha Mutual, which has insured 33,108 lives, representing a capital of $48,264,240, and the joint stock company, the Germania, in Stettin, which has a capital of $36,075,000, and has insured 74,686 lives.

THE New York Sun publishes a statement that there are nine thousand Cubans in New York, and many more in Boston and Philadelphia, and that a large number of them are without money or any means of procuring it. Much suffering among them is expected, and cases are mentioned where men have gone three days without food, after pawing everything they could spare. An appeal is made to Americans to aid them.

The seven victims of the Pantin massacre, whose bodies were unearthed, have at length been finally committed to their narrow homes in the burial ground of the family of Mme. Kinck, at Tourcoing, near Roubaix. Upwards of 50,000 persons were present at the funeral. And if they had died a natural death there would not have been a dozen present.

The Philadelphia Age says: "From recent developments in this city it is certain that a well arranged plot for cheating the citizens out of their votes had been concocted previous to the election, and carried out in part by forged and altered returns."

The Boston authorities propose to close the schools on stormy days. A certain number of strokes on the fire-alarm bell will announce to all the school children that they can stay at home and play.

MILE SCHNEIDER proposes to invade and overstep the British nation next season. Under the marshaling of Raphael Felix he will advance upon and possibly conquer the various important towns of the United Kingdom. Arrangements have been made for ninety-six performances, for which he is to receive seven thousand pounds sterling, or three hundred and seventy-five dollars for each representation. These terms are spoken of by the French papers as extraordinary, and for an operative "star" who cannot sing, and whose acting is only remarkable for its ferocious audacity, they undoubtedly are. It only remains now for some enterprising American manager to offer her one thousand dollars a night, retinue, traveling expenses, &c., and the record of her experiences as an actress who has received more for doing less than any other alive will be complete.

COMMENT is made upon the application said to have been made by Minister Washburne to the State Department for the allowance by Congress of an appropriation of fifteen thousand dollars in coin as contingent expenses for the French mission, on the ground that the salary of seventeen thousand five hundred dollars is insufficient to maintain the proper dignity of the position. Not that the sum is not necessary, but people cannot help thinking of what a reception such a request would have met with if made by Mr. Dayton, Mr. Bigelow or General Dix, with Mr. Washburne on the floor of the House. There will be some slightly sarcastic references if that proposition ever comes before the House.

GENERAL CANBY has refused to give a decision in the case from Petersburg, Virginia, wherein his interposition was invoked, in order that a white woman and a black man might have a marriage license issued to them. The Petersburg Courier says he thinks the courts should settle all such matters.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Fall and Its Dangers.

Animal as well as vegetable life is powerfully affected by the great atmospheric change that takes place in the fall. But for the flowers, the foliage and the herbs of the field there is no help. Their time has come and they must die. It is otherwise with man. For him the means of reinvigoration have been provided by skill and science. To recruit his exhausted energies and fortify himself against the disorders generated by the sudden depression of temperature and the unwholesome exhalations of autumn, he must tone his nervous system, invigorate his digestion, and give energy to his appetite with HOSKETT'S STOMACH BITTERS. He may then face the morbid influences of the season fearlessly. The chilling night dews and heavy morning mists will have no power to make him shiver and burn, to affect his liver, to disorder his stomach or to render any latent element of disease in his system active and dangerous. To the sufferer from general debility, whether constitutional or arising from other causes, this potent vegetable specific is earnestly recommended. And let it be remembered that physical weakness opens the door to all maladies. Vigor is the chief defense against all causes of disease, and HOSKETT'S BITTERS may be truly pronounced the safest and surest of all invigorants. It is the most genial of all vegetable tonics, and is admirably adapted to the wants and weaknesses of the more delicate sex, as well as to the ailments of men.

WORM CANDY

—OR—

SANTONIN

—THE—

Most Reliable Vermifuge

EVER OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

Compounded of Purely Vegetable Ingredients.

ENTIRELY HARMLESS.

Safe for Children of any Age.

NEVER FAILS TO EFFECTUALLY

Destroy Worms.

Since the discovery of Santonin, the tasteless, active principle of the European Worm-seed (Semen Contra) its consumption has wonderfully increased. The seed in substance has been long and favorably known as a vermifuge, but its unpleasant taste and odor, and the bulk of the dose, have interfered with its use in this country. At this time the Santonin, on account of its being tasteless, and a reliable vermifuge, is fast displacing all other remedies for worms.

Almost all of the popular worm nostrums of the day depend for their efficacy upon the Santonin which they contain; but in these it is found in varying proportions and of uncertain purity; and very often again in combination with other elements unknown to the physicians, and often hazardous to their nature.

My purpose is to present to the medical profession this valuable medicine in a simple, reliable and agreeable form, in determined quantities and of uniform composition.

To accomplish this, I have prepared these lozenges with great care, of Santonin of tested purity, very carefully distributed throughout the mass from which the Lozenges are formed.

The materials have been so compounded that the Lozenges will stand unaltered by time or climate. The boxes are also impervious to moisture from the atmosphere.

To give the Santonin time for full effect upon the worms, the addition of any purgative medicine to the Lozenges has been avoided.

It may, therefore, be proper, two or three hours after the administration of the second dose, to use some simple purgative for the purpose only of discharging the worms.

These Lozenges contain only pure Sugar and pure Santonin. The only merit I claim is the ascertained purity of the ingredients, and its thorough and careful distribution, so that each Lozenge contains its full act portion of Santonin; the dose sufficiently indicating the quantity.
